Preface

I wrote all of these poems, over a hundred pages, in September 2016, a year and a half after my wife Carol passed away suddenly and shockingly, on February 17, 2015. I hadn't written poetry at all for many years, for reasons I explain in Rereading Poets: The Life of the Author. A random gift from a friend (as I explain in the introduction to Li Po-ems) somehow opened a floodgate that poured forth, a darkly cathartic paroxysm of grief. I was often writing multiple poems a day, none of them pre-scripted, ceaseless waves of words I simply could not resist. By month's end, it was all over, leaving me exhausted and with these three very different series of poems. It's hard to believe the same author wrote them, they have that little in common. But they came, each of them, irresistibly, from some inner core or outer source that I seemed to have no conscious control over. All I could do was type, type, type, as fast as could, recording as best I could what this source wanted me to say. I actually uploaded many of these poems directly to my website, in real time while I was writing them. I then published them separately in three separate volumes. Now I'm putting them together in one book. They belong together, I know in my heart, and if you can read them, despite their differences, as one torrent roaring down a deep channel that it both follows and creates along the way you will understand something of consequence not just about me and my unique experience with grief, but about grief itself, how it demands time and attention whether or not you have either available for it, how it insists on having its say, whether you want to hear it or not, how what it wants in the end is not just to speak, but to heal. This was the most astonishing month in my whole life, what it led me to record in these three consecutive convulsions, which were not only verbal creations but self-creations, exactly what one needs when there is no self left in there, having been shocked out of existence by a sudden trauma, the saying and the healing, all one in the end. I am so deeply grateful that “the force that through the green fuse drives the flower,” which is life not death, came to my aid when I most needed it.

Part 1:

Li Po-ems

All lines quoted from Li Po are from David Hinton's translations, as listed below, with the exception of the last two passages in poem #1, invented for that conversation, and the passages quoted in poems #1, #5, and #15, which were translated by my friend Yan Pu.

Introduction: September 1, 2016

Last fall [2015] my friend Yan Pu translated a poem by Li Po, the 8th century Chinese poet, one of my favorites. Her translation just knocked my socks off, so beautiful, which got me thinking about him again. This past January one of her friends in England found my book This Fall: essays on loss and recovery, and it found her at a just the right time in her life. I have gotten to know both of them quite well in the meantime. A few weeks ago my friend in England sent me, via our friend here, a beautiful ceramic statue of Li Po, seated on a rustic wooden half-log lodged inside a golden-steel circle, which itself is perched up on a large wooden base. It is magnificent. When I brought it home I wanted to put him somewhere I'd encounter him often, establish a relationship with him. As soon as I walked into my dining room, I knew where he belonged: on the table right across from me. My wife Carol passed suddenly and unexpectedly last year. No matter our schedules, we always ate dinner together. I am alone now, so having a presence on the other side of our table would be, I knew, a big upgrade to my dining experience. Almost immediately, first meal together, we struck up a kind of conversation (mostly, but not entirely, silently). Meal after meal, just Li and me. In late August I thought I would try to formalize this conversational pattern through compositions that combined his words and mine. In other words, write some poems. So I began to re-read some of his poems. The very first poem I picked brought tears to my eyes, good tears, made me think about my wife, Carol, who used to sit across the table from me. I wrote my first conversation with Li quickly, and then over the next ten days the rest, all coming so easily, like talking with a friend. These poems felt right. Just right. The way poems are supposed to feel. I put them together here to invite a right reader, maybe you, to join us in this conversation.

#1: 9/1/16

Li:

"The deep forest reveals a few deer, the creek flowing conceals the midday bells.

No one knows where you have gone, I lean against two or three pines, wistful."

Me:

Because last night I decided everything, today I took the path we always took together, the wide one, to the great green field, heaven!

At the head of the narrow way down the hill, a small doe stood, stared at me, perfectly still, so beautiful.

I knew it was you, stopped. Five minutes, ten minutes, long, we stood still together eye to eye, my tears streaming.

I couldn't bear for you to have to stay here, this world, this nothing, so long, moved toward you. You leapt away, heaven.

Li:

What is this heaven?

Me:

Where she is.

Li:

Are the gods there?

Me:

If no god is there I will know there is no god worth my knowing.

#2: 9/1/16

Li:

"I leave Ch'ing Ch'i for Three Gorges. Thinking of you without seeing you, I pass downstream of Yu-chou.

Poor waters of home. I know how it feels: ten thousand miles of farewell on this boat."

Me:

Some nights in my dreams she is right there, no river-seam carving gorges between thinking and seeing, her high mountain and mine.

She never speaks, knowing words are just broken-down boats that keep me afloat, barely, between here and there, flotsam unable to go back, row home, ten thousand miles upstream where think and see are together again, where there is no such word as "farewell."

#3: 9/1/16

Li:

"Here, after wandering among these renowned mountains, the heart grows rich with repose.

Why talk of cleansing elixirs of immortality?
Here, the world's dust rinsed from my face,

I'll stay close to what I've always loved, content to leave the peopled world forever."

Me:

Here, walking, you with me, and her, we three, I say "I am no-not-alone," just these trees to believe me, wandering solitary among them on the same small path day after day, we three, these trees what's left of my peopled world, both immortality and the world's dust rinsed from my face daily by rain, my tears, so close to what I always loved, but not . . .
heart rich with everything but repose.

#4: 9/2/16

Li:

"In Hsiang-yang, pleasures abound. They play
'Copper-Blond Horses,' and we sing and dance.

But it's a river town. Return to clear water, and a blossoming moon bares our delusions."

Me:

The reel I designed in my dream, smaller than her closed fist, delivered a line to a tiny tub 100 yards upstream, pulled a full-grown man kicking to get free through rough water up the bank to her feet.
The other men tested oohed, ahhed, went home.

So she set a second test that no reel in any man's hand could meet.
I smiled at her guile packed my gear and left, without even one cast.

I do not know how long she watched from the bank, mouth wide, waited for my turning back.

I know how to sing and dance in these river towns, pleasures abounding.
A blossoming moon soon enough bares the delusion.
Clear water, a fair test for a good man with a good reel, flows only downstream,
never turning back.

#5: 9/2/16

Li:

"Sun rises over the eastern nook, as if coming from the underground.

Grasses never refuse to flourish in spring wind; Trees never resent their leaf-fall under autumn sky.

I will include myself in eternal heaven and earth, become part of the Mighty Power of the world."

Just yesterday it seems trillium carved starlight sparkle into last year's leaf-fall dark, up and down ravines too steep for hungry deer to reach, the rare rosy-fingered ones gathered at the dogleg turn I take, the way down, each a little dawnlit day.

Today sunroots, eight feet tall, hundreds and hundreds, lean into the portal of my path, a palisade I pass through, coming from underground out into Mighty Power: the light, right now and right now.

Do not refuse, they say, season to season, resent. Myself: included.

#6: 9/2/16

Li:

"It's September now. Butterflies appear in the west garden. They fly in pairs, and it hurts. I sit heart-stricken at the bloom of youth in my old face.

Before you start back from out beyond all those gorges, send a letter home.

I'm not saying I'd go far to meet you, no further than Ch'ang-feng Sands."

Me:

The one buddleia we planted out back cost next to nothing, a buck.

This year there are seven, eight, ten, so many, "invasive" they say.

So what, I say, so beautiful, September now, seven-foot stems cascade every which way, laden, masses of purple florets bobbing, butterflies all day coming and going, swallowtails, monarchs, cabbage whites.

When they fly in pairs, they do not hurt.
Singles, maybe, the little white ones, and I think you are almost with me, now, so close, so out of reach, letters home I cannot decipher.

I don't know how far I'd go to meet you, further for sure than Ch'ang-feng Sands, those thousands of miles, beyond the gorges.

The garden is so near. I see it from here, and your face everywhere these days, so full, we both, with the bloom of youth.

Next month, maybe, I will be old, gray again, heart-stricken. Not today.
It's September now. Butterflies appear.

#7: 9/2/16

Li:

"The night's lazy, the moon bright. Sitting here a recluse plays his pale white ch'in, and suddenly, as if cold pines were singing it's all those harmonies of grieving wind.

Intricate fingers flurries of white snow, empty thoughts emerald-water clarities:

No one understands now. Those who could hear a song this deeply vanished long ago."

Me:

Once a lazy moon-bright night she listened and I sang. Now, no one, pale white I play, recluse they say, cold pines, wind-grieving, hard harmonies, who cares to hear, share songs with air, notes fingered, white flurries floating, intricate emerald-empty clarities no one understands now, my love, friends, all vanished long ago, such sweet songs buried deeply.

#8: 9/3/16

Li:

"Flourishing a white-feather fan lazily, I go naked in green forests.

Soon, I've hung my cap on a cliff, set my hair loose among pine winds."

Me:

Yes, let's let loose today, Li.
I cry way too much for a guy, laugh like a moonstruck loon.
I am "tired of tears and laughter," twisted together licorice sticks.

It is summer still, forests greener even than green, knee deep in green.

If we meet another naked man
we three can walk all the day long, lazily, hair set loose, caps hung on cliffs.

#9: 9/3/16

Li:

"It's like a boundless dream here in this world, nothing anywhere to trouble us.

I have therefore been drunk all day, a shambles of sleep on the front porch.

I pour another drink. Soon, awaiting this bright moon, I'm chanting a song.
And now it's over, I've forgotten why."

Me:

Ah! Li, just me, you and the moon tonight, that tight, sidewise smile, tiny bright tuck in a big, black sky.
The moon, the sky: one "me," the other "my life," but which I wonder is which?

Last night, like most, my sleep a shambles, stopping, starting, stumbling back and forth: boundless dream, boundless world, but which I wonder is which?

I don't drink much, but you sure do, so let's take some whiskey straight:
To you, to that soon-to-be-goofball-moon we just see a stitch of tonight, to me, my life, a boundless dream, this world, whatever makes the sweeter song to chant, nothing to trouble us.

When any or all of it's over, I hope we'll both have forgotten why.

#10:9/3/16

Li:

"Short and tall, spring grasses lavish our gate with green, as if passion driven, everything returned from death to life.

My burr-weed heart--it alone is bitter.

You'll know that in these things I see you here again, planting our gardens behind the house, and us lazily gathering what we've grown. It's no small thing."

Me:

All the small things, you always said, what you would miss most not being here, that first taste of coffee in the morning, the feel of a knee bending on its way down stairs, and me I'd say, laughing, Paul, from paucus, Latin for small!
You never said yes, but you never said no, just laughed, too, no small thing.
Some days I think only of small things so I won't recall all I now know, my burr-weed heart growing bitter.

Some days I recall all the small things so I won't forget what I love,

Some nights, the perfect ones, grasses lavish, passion-driven, I sit in the back yard with my guitar, sing songs softly, your chair beside mine, empty, but no, not in my yard, only a chair I am "saving," a sweater maybe flung on it, until the one I came with gets back.

From death to life? Crazy you say. Never.
I know. I know. But still,

It's no small thing.

#11: 9/4/16

Li:

"Heaven's fragrance everywhere pure emptiness, heaven's music endless,

I sit silent. It's still, the entire Buddha-realm in a hair's-breadth, mind-depths

kalpas begin and end out of nowhere."

Me:

This morning I woke with the scent of henna on my pillow.
A few times a year you used it on your hair, toucan on the box, the same gray ceramic bowl you mixed it up in, the one you had before we were married, kept on the bottom shelf of the skinny kitchen cabinet next to the refrigerator, lightly stained from all that black goop.

Those days, when we made love, I would breathe the scent in deep, skies-full of wild dark birds.

I never knew why you did it, your hair always jet black, thick.

If you were here beside me this morning I would ask you.
Why? Just once. Maybe if I were lucky, you would tell me everything that gathers in my head now around that question, those flocks of many-thousand birds swarming restlessly, early fall, how they whirl and wheel as if they are one thing, liquid, flowing around an invisible solid center, what they want to know before it's time to leave.

Or just many-stranded strong black hair caught up in gust of autumn wind fulsome with the scent of henna.

#12: 9/4/16

Li:

"Alone, searching for blue-lotus roofs, I set out from city gates. Soon frost clear, Tung-lin temple bells call out, Hu Creek's moon bright in pale water."

Me:

That moon tonight, sleek, white boat sliding, silent, over still dark water, I inside it trying to guide it, why?

Time, this deep, black lake I float on, in, over, only one moving: water, sky, which?

I set out tonight searching again for something, anything frost clear, nearby, far, no matter.

Temple bells call out, soon, when?
Sky, moon, lake, I, wait, glide, silent.

#13: 9/4/16

Li:

"Raising my cup, I toast the bright moon, and facing my shadow makes friends three.

Kindred a moment with moon and shadow, I've found a joy that must infuse spring:

I sing, and moon rocks back and forth;
I dance, and shadow tumbles into pieces.

Intimates forever, we'll wander carefree and meet again in Star River distances."

Me:

My shadow dances with me just like you did, can keep the beat when I won't. I had no idea.

Today, by myself in the woods, sidewise to sun, it just walked up beside me, on the left, we turned, faced each other, and right there on the sunlit forest floor we did a little bit of jitterbug.

I know there is always dancing where you are, those Star River distances "don't mean a thing" if they "ain't got that swing." Some night when I can't sleep, sitting out back, the moon and me rocking back and forth, I'll slip it off, send it up.

We will dance the night away, Our last dance your favorite,
"Waltzing Matilda," Tom Waits, so long, like forever, that voice, the one I would have had if I had been a better man, maybe there I'll have it, sing to you, cheek to cheek:

"Wasted and wounded, it ain't what the moon did, I've got what I paid for now.
See you tomorrow, hey Frank, can I borrow a couple of bucks from you to go waltzing Matilda, waltzing Matilda, you'll go waltzing Matilda with me."

And you'll be my Matilda filled full with thrills 'til the moon sends my shadow back down.

#14: 9/4/16

Li:

emptiness, heaven's music endless,

Me:

My kitchen clock tick-tocks, shrill crickets still trill, sirens whine by.
I wait to want to sleep.

My mind is not at ease, un-silent I sit, each breath a hooked fish reeled up from mind-depths, bottomless, thick with un-thoughts.

Yesterday, heavenly fragrance.
Today just impure emptiness.
Vast kalpas begin and end out of nowhere. No one, not even you, to notice.

#15: 9/4/16

Li:

"Autumn wind clear, autumn moon bright, Fallen leaves gather then scatter, Dark crows settle and startle."

Me:

Beech tree bark is parchment smooth, perfect for carving.

On one I walk by daily: a heart, arrow-stitched, meticulous script:

JC
loves AW

Right beneath, huge letters gouged out helter-skelter:

ALL

I wonder day by day:
one or the other betrayed, hateful? Someone else enraged, forewarning? Today I wondered: Which came first?

All I know is this: Nothing in this world is fake: love, hate, rage: just decide day by day which your knife will carve in bark.

Li:

"When will we end our longing and meet again?
That thought, this moment, suddenly unbearable!"

Wind clear, moon bright.
Leaves, in piles, scatter.
Crows, cold, startle.

Nothing fake.
That thought, this moment, suddenly unbearable.

#16: 9/5/16

Li:

"Are hopes and dreams any different?
We bustle around looking for what?"

A million miles azure pure--the eye reaches beyond what ruins our lives."

Me:

Today, all that light leaning into the hill on the high side from azure pure September skies, I saw for the first time all the tallest trees! I've walked this path now many-thousand days, and today they were there, everywhere I looked, up and down, three feet wide at the base some more, maybe four:
shapely maples, arms draped over one another's shoulders up there where light lasts daylong, rocket-ship-straight poplars, flames flaring on forest floor, blasting past me into space.

I have no idea if they were here yesterday, will be tomorrow.

But today I heard what they said, not all those big things they surely must know, having been here so long, not deep secrets whispered close to my ear, and not, for sure, hopes and dreams, no, bustling around looking for what . . .

Just this: "Look. See." And today I did: so many huge, true things standing upright all the way to the sky, right now, right there, for someone, anyone, me, say, to look, finally, see.

"Inexhaustible, Ching-ting Mountain and I gaze at each other, it alone remaining."

Yes.

#17: 9/5/16

Li:

"Wandering Autumn River in sorrow, I gaze into Autumn River blossoms fiercely. Soon, it rivals Yen-hsien for lovely mountains and streams and for wind and sun, it's another Ch'ang-sha."

Me:

In these woods, at least here, this sacristy of space that holds, releases every shed tear, it is not sorrow I feel, not joy, either, not anything I name.

I gaze fiercely, blossoms in spring, summer's green-steeped trees, and now, fall again, these first few flutter-down leaves.

This is no place for grief.
Here I am cared for. Where care comes from, or how, is of no matter to me now.

You say your river rivals that one, wind, sun, the same,

Ch'ang-sha, much fought over in your day, and that one, for mountains and streams, Yen-hsien, wide-astride seaside.

Autumn River, wandering, where a recluse-fisherman drops in a line, lazes, while you gaze, fierce, into blossoms, I see what you mean.

Li:

"No plans to go looking for such solitude, I set out on a whim, never mind distance."

Me:

Like you, Li, I do not go where there is no one;
I go where no one else goes.
Solitude simply follows.

Here is everything they seek there: wind, sun, mountains, streams, not others, of course, all crowding around to see, but you, Li, and me, what we find here, free.

#18: 9/6/16

"Spring breezes and their drunken guest: today we were meant for each other."

Me:

We met once, breeze and guest, meant for each other.
Then done. Months. Nothing.

Li:

"It's like a bird among clouds: once gone, gone without a trace."

Me:

I never remember exactly the face of someone I love. Only later, a trace.

Li:

"I hoard the sky a setting sun leaves . . ."

Me:

Sun sets for an hour, gauze-clouds, layered lightly, every color eye has ever seen, or one color through many eyes: what's left in the sky after light memory hopes to hoard . . .

Li:

"I can't tell anymore. Which is long and which is short, the river flowing east or thoughts farewell brings on."

Me:

Impossible to say exactly when day turns night, is not now but then, not farewell but what farewell brings on.

Li:

"Over Heaven Mountain, the bright moon rises through a boundless sea of clouds."

Me:

Tonight a bright moon rises, same clouds, different boundless sea, sunset sky unremembered.

Li:

"I sing, watch cloud and moon, empty song soon long wind through pine."

Me:

Cloud and moon, long wind, soon empty song sing.

Li:

"There's nothing left now--only this West River moon that once lit those who peopled the imperial Wu Palace."

Me:

Moonlight moves through air, then nothing left,
not even memory of moonlight.

Li:

"And somewhere, high in a tower tonight, a restless woman cries out in half sleep."

We always know exactly when a lover stops loving.
Just listen: tonight, restless, she cries out in half sleep.

#19: 9/6/16

Li:

"Staying the night at Summit-Top Temple you can reach out and touch the stars.

I venture no more than a low whisper afraid I'll wake the people of heaven."

Me:

Sky so Star-River-near tonight, no moon, yet all-night light.

Words back up, breath holds, not even a whisper, so no stars get jarred awake, make people of heaven, reach down, stay the night.

Li:

"No noise, no confusion--all I want is this life pillowed high in emerald mist."

#20: 9/6/16

Li:

Me:

Last night in a dream an old lover told me again everything wrong with me, why she was leaving with him.

I woke bereft.
Those who hurt most keep seeping in through sleep, come and go as they please.

I fear who waits for me upstairs tonight, Li.
I fight to keep sleep away, eyes tired, trying to close even as I type this line.

"Are hopes . . . any different?"

Me:

Hope goes both ways:
holds out for the god I don't now know, holds in the devil I do know, wish-maker, looking . . . for what?

#21: 9/7/16

Li:

"Facing ten-thousand-mile winds, autumn geese leaving, we can still laugh and drink in this tower tonight, chant poems of Immortality Land, ancient word-bones.

The clarity of Hseih T'iao reappears among us:

all embracing, thoughts breaking into free flight, we ascend azure heaven, gaze into a bright moon.

But slice water with a knife, and water still flows, empty a winecup to end grief, and grief remains grief.

You never get what you want in this life, so why not shake your hair loose on a boat at play in dawn light."

Me:

Those geese: letters from home?
When home is azure heaven, they will never make it, wind ten-thousand miles facing.

These poems: my knife slicing water over and over. Grief remains grief, flows.

You get what you get in this life, not want.

Word-bones build poems. But breath, yours, hers, broke long ago into free flight.
Immortality is not a Land I know how to find.

I can gaze into a bright moon all night long laugh and drink in this empty tower, shake my hair loose at play of dawn light.

But nothing, not even clarity, reappears.

Li:

"We the living, we're passing travelers:
it's in death alone that we return home."

Me:

I had a home here. Now, adrift, passing, the way looks long

Li:

"Bleached bones lie silent, say nothing, and how can ever-green pines see spring?"

Me:

Word-bones lie, too, Li, or say nothing.
Like ever-green pines, they never see spring.

Li:

"Before and after pure lament, this life's phantom treasure shines beyond knowing."

Me:

I want to believe you, Li. I remember when "before" was, treasure beyond knowing.
But tell me: when is "after?"

#22: 9/8/16

Li:

"At our gate, where you lingered long, moss buried your tracks one by one, deep green moss I can't sweep away.

And autumn's come early. Leaves fall."

"Hsien Mountain rises above emerald Han River waters and snow-white sand. On top, inscribed to life's empty vanishing, a monument stands, long since blotted out beneath green moss."

"There's a flake of rock on Chiang-tzu Peak, a painted screen azure heaven sweeps clean.

The poem inscribed here keeps all boundless antiquity alive—green words in moss brocade.

Me:

This summer was so hot and wet moss is everywhere, fallen logs, flagstone steps, sidewalk cracks, layered on forest floor, so soft, thick, lavish, I want to caress it lovingly, lie in its lap, linger long on its lush-forever green.

Footsteps, monuments, words, whatever these poems are, swept away, buried, blotted out vanishing. No matter.

Love rises like Hsien Mountain, sweeps clean heaven's painted screen, brocade boundless, flows like Han River shining by snow-white sand, carves lines inscribed to life.

Li:

"my ruins of heart, thoughts of you unending."

#23: 9/9/16

Li:

"9/9, out drinking on Dragon Mountain, I'm an exile among yellow blossoms smiling.

Soon drunk, I watch my cap tumble in wind, dance in love--a guest the moon invites."

Me:

9/9 here today, too, Li, no holiday to climb Dragon Mountain, get drunk on chrysanthemum wine, yellow blossoms smiling, cap-tumble love-dance, no, just another day, unless I make something of it finish this book, say, write one last poem, a long one, call it done, 20-some poems in 10 days, not in your league maybe,
"100 poems/gallon of wine" Tu Fu says of you, but for me, 0-for-20-years going in, not half bad!

OK, back where it started, those chrysanthemums, not wine yet, that was later, took time.
I'll rewrite the first poem I made just for her, this time
"I" and "you" instead of "he" and "she:"

*Crazy as the wind I was and wanted, for myself, nothing; but for you:
the most glorious chrysanthemums, armloads of yellow held loose, huge blooms oozing dollops of sunlight; behind them, my smile, so wide no one, not even you, could ever hope to resist; then I'd run toward you through the tall grass, in slo-mo maybe, my dozens of chrysanthemums bobbing every which way, crazy as the wind I was, and wanted.
Or so I told my florist in the morning, who recommended roses, or a nosegay-- anything but crazy, but chrysanthemums, but what I wanted, was: the wind.*

That florist was a moron.
What wind we were!
Crazy every which way.
Your sunlight dollops, my smile wide. I wanted: Nothing but for you.

Even on this dark-as-your-hair night, late summer heat stifling, no moon, stars haze-hidden, leaves leaden, locked in place, nothing running even slow-mo, if I stand stock-still long enough, focus just at the edge where cheek-skin meets with air, it's there. Feel it? There, now, there! a little breeze, a breath, mine, yours, who's to say, what's left of all that crazy wind.

Li:

"Yesterday was our grand scale-the-heights day, and this morning I'm tipping the cup again.

Poor chrysanthemums. No wonder you're so bitter, suffering our revels these two days straight."

Me:

Today is still today where I am, Li, not yet yesterday. My cup stays full no matter how often I tip it, mums not yet poor here, bitter.

I would take this day two days straight, revel in it every day, forever.
9/9: tomorrow always on the wing!

Li:

"Success or failure, life long or short:
our fate's given by Changemaker at birth.

But a single cup evens out life and death, our ten thousand concerns unfathomed, and once I'm drunk, all heaven and earth vanish, leaving me suddenly alone in bed, forgetting that person I am even exists.

Of all our joys, this must be the deepest."

Me:

You look so relaxed there, lounging on your log on my dining room table looped in a halo of gold, cup hoisted to welcome me every time I sit down to eat.

Maybe you drink all day long, forgetting you exist, all heaven and earth vanished, when I'm not here, too.

Or maybe, like me, you remember everything, every single second of every single day, today, yesterday, even tomorrow, the one that never seems to come, ten thousand concerns unfathomed, long or short, that flood of life that recedes every night, same way, suddenly, in bed alone, the forgetting, the deep,

I-am-less joy of sleep.

Li:

"How is it you've gotten so thin . . .
Must be all those poems you've been suffering over."

Me:

Actually I've put on a few pounds, maybe enjoying meals more now you're around.
I must just sound thin, old siren winding down whining.

Li:

"This is music enough. Why tell flutes and pipes our troubles?"

You're right, Li:
When old flutes and pipes get tired of blowing out the muck we blow into them, time for a change.

I have a new guitar,
let's give it whirl:
"Fairy tales can come true, it can happen to you . . ."

Yes, Li, to you.
And to me, too, me, too.

Li:

"Boundless, I can dwindle time and space away, losing the world in such distances!"

Me:

Yeah, yeah, I know. I can, too.
Dwindling space and time, might sound hard but it's not, especially at our age, dwindling as we speak!

Lose the world? Sure, I can go for that,
at least the world
handed out to us here, so near to nothing I can't believe anyone takes it seriously.
If you don't lose that,

for a while anyway, get up where it's clear, you'll never even know a real world is there.
But until you get back down again, all the way in,
what you saw up here won't much matter.

You can stay drunk as you want, Li, long as you want,
float your little boat through great gorges all the way to Timbuktu.
But there's still a here here, a now now.

I'm no space-time Einstein, but sooner or later, you have to look to see,
take the path to make it.
So how about, for once, we try to beef up time and space, fill it, full as we can, real me and real you, at our real table, putting on pounds so we take up more space, sing sweet old songs, nothing in them but perfectly pitched noise, to mark off one now, then another, and another, all that time is, really, a rhythm, a wave, moving, one we make and ride in the making: now, now, now, marking note by note all the time it takes.

Li:

"I bow, then bow again, deeper, ashamed I haven't an immortal's talent."

Me:

I think we both can take a bow now, Li.
Immortal's talent?
Out of my league, too.

Ashamed? Well, elegy gets old, at least for those who listen.

Let's call it off today, 9/9, your wine-wine day, my stop whine-whine day!

Right while I was typing that stupid joke, yes:

RIGHT! NOW! WOW!

Feel it? the air, the instant I made myself laugh, moving again, not fast-forward-fast maybe, totally tomorrow, but not just a little breath either, tickling cheek-hair; this one's a big one, wind, then another and another . . .

Tonight, Li, I'm not in love with anyone but me.

And I have a feeling, when I wake up tomorrow, it won't still be today.
It will really be tomorrow:
9/10: the rest of my life.

So what-say, after I come back from my morning walk, if you're not too hung-over from all that mum-wine, when I sit down here with my oatmeal, we just talk about sports, those Buccos, lost another tough one. I'd like that.
I think you might like it, too.

Part 2:

Harvest Moon

Introduction: September 19, 2016

"To be honest, I was a bit shocked. Yes, I see a different side of you. Many times I laughed out loud; in between I was suddenly silent, too, and my heart was tied by the words you wrote."

Marian Orton

I wrote this series during the five-day cycle of the "harvest moon." I walked out into my front yard during its waxing phase, as I often do to view the full moon—which always comes up on that side of my house—because I find it so invigoratingly beautiful. It was such a clear night, the moon so big and bright, that it just kind of hijacked my head, which it held captive for the duration, those next five days. I wrote compulsively, propulsively, long, languorous, loopy poems, as you will see when you get to them, like nothing I've ever written before. Many times I laughed out loud; in between I was suddenly silent, too, and my heart was tied by the words I wrote.

9/15: Now I'm on this side of that

The moon tonight is full, so full, I mean really full, overfull, of light, yes, and of itself, that look of surprise on its face, not quite Munch's "Scream," more like, hands to cheeks: I can't believe it's so dark and I'm so bright!

Then the crickets (I didn't notice them at first, that huge moon taking up all my headroom) but now I've settled down, the crickets, pretty loud, a singing sound, so pleasant, not like last night, all those eyes crying. I guess the moon makes all the difference to them, too, a singing-out-loud night like this.

So today I'm thinking, god, I can't take it, this world, "too much with us," WW might say, but no-o-o-o, "too less with me," PK says back, yes, too less, way-too, today, than yesterday, and yesterday way-too than the day before, and, god, tomorrow, if that's way-too, too, well, what's even the point thinking it through to . . .

(If you've been on this track you know pretty much where it goes, just follow it like I did all the way today to . . .

. . .THE END)

OK, now I'm on this side of that, full moon bonkers with light tonight, crickets crooning like there's no tomorrow, well, I'm thinking: Why should I care? Yes. Thinking: Why should I?

9/16: I just couldn't stop

So this morning I just couldn't stop laughing, I mean couldn't stop.
I think it was knowing how now for some reason I happen to know way more than you're supposed to get to know while you're still here, and I'm not sure how it happened, maybe it was "just bad luck," what that doctor told me when "a couple tough weeks" turned into months and months of misery and I still see his face, that half-smile flash frozen into his cheeks hoping I'd laugh instead of lunging at him, throat-throttling, and I don't remember if I laughed, but I'm pretty sure I didn't strangle him or I'd be in more trouble now than I am knowing just this much, and, sure, I could tell you some of it, if you pushed hard enough, thought you could take it, but then, like they say, well, at least one of us would have to go, and I'd prefer not to have it be you, so I'm off now to the woods, my walk, all those trees, well, they already know all of this, I know, for sure, way more I think, too, so if I happen to start blabbing instead of laughing, at least they won't be like, yikes, Munch's "Scream," and I'm thinking ahead to the ones I want to walk by today, hoping they'll be where they normally are, which is no sure thing in my woods, that big black cherry, flaky-shingle bark up and down, so charming, like a fairy-tale dollhouse I could walk into for a little kiss and one of us would wake up and the other wouldn't still be a frog, but I can never find the door, and believe me I've walked around and around it lots of times looking and I never, ever find the door, or that monstrous oak right out in the open, six feet at the base at least, like a ten story leg, so long I can't see what it belongs to, so I just guess from that huge foot, two-foot toes grasping ground, one side a brontosaurus maybe, head way up there somewhere, munching on, what, who knows and the other side a couple of elephants leaning into each other, still asleep leg-locked together, so sweet, and I always pay close attention passing, in case one of them decides to take a quick step and I have to jump out of the way, but not too far, hoping I can get a glimpse of what's been kept secret all these years under that big foot, or the heart-shaped poplar up the hill chain-saw toppled last year, too near the power lines, at least waist high just lying there on its side, all that it knew slowly spewing back to the universe bit by byte by megabyte, terabytes of it still left there on the ground, and I think if I sat with it for the rest of my life and listened close enough I'd overhear a bit of what it now has to give back, but today is my only whole day this week to do absolutely nothing and I'm in a hurry to get on with that so I keep walking toward a voice, a real one I promise, a woman, on the phone maybe, just talk-talk-talking, and then the three of them walk up single file on the one-lane path, that fluffy poodle-doodle dog up front then her, then him, her husband, had to be, and I can't tell if she's talking to him or the dog and what does it matter anyway, either way it's all still love, and tomorrow maybe he'll be up front hearing what's rushing up toward the back of his head from her, and she says to me, don't worry he wouldn't hurt anyone, and I assume she's talking about the dog, though I can tell instantly (I am that good at this, really) that the guy wouldn't either, just happy to be out walking today with these two, and then the little "bridge," hardly a bridge, two steps long, the tiny "brook" running under it, hardly a brook, two steps wide, heady today with yesterday's rain going over the rocks with a hard "glug, glug," like pouring a two-liter bottle of coke into the sink fast because it's too flat to drink, and I know right then that this poem is over, all I have to say today, down the drain or under the bridge, whatever, even though you waited all this way thinking you'd get to know something you don't already know, not just glug, glug, glug, glug, gone . . .

. . . except on the drive home, a big truck I'm following, on the back door, a ten-foot, full-color bottle of coke, not the two-liter job like your fat uncle in too-tight pants but the Marilyn Monroe one (yes, I am that old) with the waist you just want to put your arm around for a long, slow dance all the way home, all those dew-drops on the dark glass like maybe her voice would be, whispering into your ear, I mean my ear, something that means nothing and everything all at the same time, one breathful of it carrying more than I or all those trees could even hope to know, now or ever, and the slogan high up on the right side:

Love it!
Again. And again.

OK. I will. I will.
Soon as I get home.
Can't wait. Thanks.

9/16: THINKING! Whew! Who?

So there, right then, last second or two,
I was thinking of her, I mean thinking! Really THINKING! Whew! Who?
No way I'm telling you that because then, well, like I said earlier, one of us would have to go and this time I'd rather it not be me, not at least until I get done with this thinking.

Anyway, what's so bad about that?
Take that Galapagos turtle I was reading about today online, the one who's well over a hundred, stuck in a zoo until he was my age, I mean, really, literally, MY AGE, stuck ALONE in a zoo! and then they let him loose back home, to make up for lost time, do his best, get the numbers back up, 800 little turtles out there with his name on them now, they say, and he's still going strong with the ladies, sweet, except one article called him a "dirty old man" because, what? you tell me. And why I'm wondering aren't young men ever dirty, like right now, when they're thinking about her, just like I am, I'm sure, except way more so, because in my head she still has all her clothes on, I know, I just looked again to be sure, and, really, all I was going to do was ask if we could hold hands, really, that's all, for a walk in the woods, maybe, have a few laughs together, that's it, pretty tame, I'd say, or lame, you might . . .

but, hey, don't get me wrong, if she was up for more, I'd be up for more, except holding hands is enough more to get me thinking right now, been so long, and I'm sure she's way too busy anyway, a little dinner, dance a while, back to my place, hers, either way, spend the night . . . yeah, right!

OK, now I'm done thinking about her.
I need to go out and mow the lawn.
This summer sucked that way, so hot and rainy the grass never stopped growing the way it's supposed to, mid-July, August at the latest, and now it's September and I'm still mowing once a week or more, just like this "thinking" was supposed to stop, I thought, mid-July, August at the latest, now, September, well into it even, it still won't stop growing, huh?

. . . and another thing, that guy she's going to be with tonight, well, I was him once, and I can tell you, or her if she'd bother to ask, but she won't, he's got pretty much one thing on his mind and it's not her, hasn't even started yet to "think," believe me, and another thing I can tell you, or her if she'd bother to ask, but she won't, I have, I mean I really, truly have.
So who's the dirty old man now, I ask you, tell me, who's the dirty old man now?

9/17: The rest of this is not a poem any more

So I'm like five minutes into my walk today and I'm already going, OK, Paul, gotta get that poem going, gotta, gotta, 20 years is a lot of time to make up, and my head is warping into it and then I thought, there, right there, that's the exact reason I quit writing poems 20 years ago, that gotta, gotta, gotta, until there's nothing there except a foofy white dog yip-yapping, look, over here, I'm pretty great, and really, aren't you just A guy-who-walks-in-the-woods guy without me? me, I make you THE guy-who-walks-in-the-woods guy, they read me and think, WOW, you, and without me they don't think of you at all, not one half-second, and that damn little PITA dog is right, but so what, I think, yeah, you're pretty great--if I do ALL THE WORK to MAKE you pretty great, and besides, why would you think you're even pretty great, what have you ever done for me, you, yeah, you, I'm looking right at you, and those others, too, the ones I turned into book after book I sent out a million times and what?
nothing, a million form letters:

Dear Chump: Thank you for sending us your reading fee so I don't have to really try to sell anything, and SASE so I didn't have to walk across the room to shred up this POS ms., I mean your work, I didn't even bother to read, or did I? don't remember, so buy our new books: My Grandfather's Life Sucked and Now I'm So Sad, Let Me Tell You! and I Put In a Few Real French Words To Make You Think I Know What Surrealism Is . . . anyway, you (I mean you mean dog over there now, not that letter-writing guy), you won't get anywhere today unless I say so and right now I'm not saying so, I'm gonna stay here, right here, over here, where I am, my walk, the one I got to take all those 20 years while you and the rest of your snippy-shit friends sat around in someone else's posh parlor, a real poet maybe, books, one that took you to the hair dresser, fed you chopped steak from a china bowl, I'm telling you, all I have to do is say and you're done, yeah, you can bark, but without me doing the work that's really about it, and I'm saying

STOP!

So now it's 8 minutes into my walk, and it's just my walk, and the rest of this is not a poem any more, and as soon as I looked here, now, in front of me, well, one of my favorite trees, which I would have missed if I waited another two seconds to say stop, that tree, like one tree for about the first 18 inches up and then it's two, but I can never tell whether it was one that turned into two going up or two that turned into one going down, and today I see this flat stone, wide and long as my foot, jammed down between the two trunks about 5 feet up and I think, no way that stone got up there on its own, someone forced it in there, for what? oh, of course, so this just-another-tree-in-the-woods might turn into a Robert Frost poem someday when the trunks grow over that stone and it looks like it's part of the "twin-tree," their "shared heart" or something, but who I ask you, whoever you are who put that there, is going to write that poem, me?

I don't think so, I'm not even a poet any more, not for the rest of this poem at least, because this is not even a poem, it's a walk in the woods, and I'm just A guy not THE guy, and I can tell you for sure that Robert Frost isn't going to pass this way any time soon, so I just grabbed that stone and wriggled it out, took a while, it was jammed in pretty good, and that tree, I'm telling you, I heard it, said "ah," that's all, "ah," not thanks, it's no poet blowing smoke, but I knew it meant thanks because now it was back to being just-another-tree-in-the-woods and now just-another-guy-in-the-woods could look at it every now and then wondering whatever he wonders until he gets along on his way . . . and about 10 feet down the path I turn around and those two trunks are in full embrace, no space at all between them, just a graceful serpentine seam, the way true lovers splice together after long separation, so grateful just to be close again, like that Klimt poster, "The Kiss" everyone had on their dorm room wall back in the 60s, two people, but so entwined with one another that after two or three tokes you could swear there's no line at all and you think that will be me this weekend, with her, or her, but it never was because there was always that flat stone someone had jammed in there and neither one of you knew how to get it out, then one day you do, and you fall into an embrace just like that one, two into one, for it seems like forever, but it's not, because one day someone up there says "enough is enough" and jams in a rock the size of Gibraltar and says OK, Paul, let me see you yank that one out, and I can't, so I turn around again and get along on my way . . .

and now I don't hear any dogs at all, at least not the ones that can't write themselves into poetry books, on their own, need me, sure, but don't get me wrong, I like dogs, real dogs, I mean, not simile dogs, already smelling of poem, real dogs, that one yesterday, say, poodle-doodle leading the way, that one didn't bark at all and wouldn't hurt me, or Sadie, say, Bridget's dog, who loves her no question, misses her when she's gone, welcomes her home, poses for all the pictures she wants to take, a dog with pizzazz, razzamatazz, even that high-pitched bark, well it's charming, and she can make it sound like words if you try hard enough and listen carefully, I mean her own words, not mine, not some poet hearing all that whining not here but over there and thinking OK, gotta, gotta, gotta, or who the hell is gonna care about me, well, I'm here to tell you, all of you, you unwritten poems, I've been around long enough to know that even if I get you pretty great, and I don't get that form letter back, but a real one, nobody and I mean nobody is gonna care about me one whit anyway, just you, you lazy, barky little things, over there, never here, always over there . . .

9/17: All these silly silences inside

I woke suddenly with you still on my mind, harvest moon, last night's light, the time we spent together out in the front yard, so sweet, yet how might I continue to write, my mind asked in my last dream, with all these silly silences inside?

It is 4AM. I was sure you would not still be here.
But the bright pool of light on the silk rug in the sunroom stuns me as I walk past, that pale glaze on the grass out back, your so-soft touch.

I am sorry I am so shy.
I never understood why words left when light shone down.

I know now, at my age, what I should not say to you and why: "I love you," never, how it stirs up still-still water, little waves rippling across a too-dark sky lapping fine-sand shores, brittle white, wearing thin edges thinner.

I know how silly silence sounds from my side of the table, that restaurant, dim as this moonlit night, so romantic, my heart full to overflowing, needing to be free of the weight of those three words, and I knew not to say them, but I did anyway, as I always do, just pushed them right out into the soft light, all that hope and fear, no place left to hide,

and from the other side of the wide-open sky, those vast still waters of togetherness stretching out forever as far as I could see, well, silence, statue smiling stiffly, staring back, saying nothing at all, and everything at once, not silly that silence, I will tell you, nothing silly, except maybe me, if you were there that night outside the window looking in, trying to fill my head with silence instead of those three words, fool, I knew, as soon as I heard them.

And for some reason we went on eating.

Now, again, sitting here, all these years later, filled with a silly silence that tries to hide those words in its dark waters, down deep where even I might not overhear them . . .

such a fool, I tell myself, every night, every hour of every night, even in my sleep, I tell myself, a fool, so full of love rippling through my dreams, and when I wake like this, 4AM, wanting just to say the only three words I know, the last three I remember, you are here with me listen, smile, but sweetly, reach out and touch me, all anyone needs when those words can't echo back, just one soft touch that says I know, I know, I know, and I will hold this moment forever in my heart, those words so sweet to hear, chalice for my joy and sadness, always with me, and when we part tonight I will kiss you lightly on your lips, so soft and warm still from the few words they let pass between us here, and mine, forever silent, you know, but still, still, this dark water.

Fingertip caresses of moonlight on the back of my hand, along my arm resting here with you, me, in that pool of your soft light in the back room, glowing, another little moon, and I know, I know, you will be back tomorrow, sit with me, all these silly silences still inside, how I might, yet, continue to write.

9/17: It's that line

I was just about to drive over to the farmers' market, but now I'm not going to, I mean I'm REALLY not going to.

It's not the drive, gruesome at 4 PM Friday, all the rush going everywhere else at once or how hard it is to park, gnarly.

It's that line, the idea of getting into it, those 10 people in front of me, thought-bubble tomatoes floating over their heads, or behind me, well, I can't see them because I'm so focused on the sellers, so slow, two of them, walking with her, her from this end of a forty-foot table to that end, waiting to hear, a basket, wait, no, just three of those tomatoes, how much is it, make change, stopping on the way back to sit on the back edge of the big truck, flatten dollars into a tray, drink water (OK, it is really hot out, so OK, water), and I'm thinking if I concentrate hard I can push the fast-forward button of farmers' market time and get up there before I'm more wilted than I'm afraid that head of red lettuce I have my eye on will be by the time I get there.

Now if the guy would drive over to my house and drop off all the things I like to get, carrots, beets, corn, beans, green or yellow, but yellow if you have them, snap peas, any fruit you're picking right now, all of it, squash, garlic, even tomatoes, which I'm kinda allergic to if I don't cook them a lot, that would be great, and I'd tip him good, just don't make me stand in that damn line; of course, he doesn't make me, I do, so no, I'm not going to, not this week at least, one line too many today in that way too-long lifetime of lines waiting for her, her, to make up her mind, thought-bubbles I'm fighting to pry my way into, but they're always already all full of tomatoes, forty feet of table, me sitting in the middle, and, well, it just those three tomatoes, not that Paul, not today, just those three tomatoes please.

Me, I take everything, all I can haul to the car without having to go back and wait in line again, bags and bags of it, enough for today, tomorrow, tomorrow, and you, for sure, if you were available tonight, I'd take you in a second, twice if I could, and I'd wait in a lot longer line to do it, too, so, what-say dinner tonight, I'll make it for you, all these bags I hauled, no, OK maybe some other time . . .

So tonight I'm gonna make french fries, out of a bag from the freezer burnt crisp just like I like them, lots of ketchup, maybe an egg, I have that, too, sounds good, and tomorrow, well, I don't care about tomorrow because today you wouldn't come over and no way now I'm going to wait in that stupid line, no way, just because there happens to be a tomorrow.

9/17: Except for this, so far

Everything I read these days depresses me, even if I wrote it, except for this, so far, this doesn't depress me yet, so I'll keep writing it until it does . . .

9/18: I just had to take off my pants

It started to rain just when I got in the car this morning to go to the woods for my walk, not hard enough to stop me, not even close, but I got pretty wet, wet enough that I just had to take off my pants, soaked through just on the front side, which, if you walk in the rain, you know is how it goes, unless it's a total downpour, the cost, I guess, of "going forward" in this life, clammy on the thighs, and I'm only telling you this because I was almost totally silent on my walk today, which is not how I usually am, so I need to get this down fast before I forget it, which is already happening . . .

I didn't even notice that until about 3/4 of the way through it, in that section with the huge oak and the huge poplar, and I tried to remember if I had said anything out loud so far, which I always do now, lots of it, and all I could remember was swearing, once, right at the top of the first hill, which I do every day, same place, without even thinking about it, because it dawns on me again that Carol is not there with me, so "FUCK!" "SHIT!" "GODDAMMIT!" LOUD, or "jesuschrist," soft, and today I remembered soft and thought about that Berryman poem where the guy on the street whispers "christ" under his breath and all the passersby behind their rosy-pink glasses can't tell if it's a prayer or a swear, and believe me, and you can because I don't wear pink glasses anymore, it's both, that one and all of them, they're always both, as in "hey, how 'bout some help down here, oh, yeah, right, I know, when hell freezes over," and that jesuschrist, that was all I said out loud today because it was raining, which is why I was telling you all this.

I just kept it all inside my head today, and what I was thinking about most of the way really was "silence," maybe because yesterday I wrote about how even if the only three words you know are "I love you" sometimes you wish you had just kept them all inside your head . . .

So I spent most of my young life silent, really silent, like this family story about me my mother told, how I didn't start to talk until way late, cried continuously for year one, then shut if off at the main and was just placid for year two, "low affect" they might say these days, and she wanted me off diapers but I never said anything, so every so often she'd take my hand, off to the bathroom, and I'd sit there and either do it or not, so one day she takes my hand and I say, you don't have to come today, I can take care of this myself, and she's dumbfounded, having started to worry that I was dumb in more ways than one, and she asked, why didn't you talk before this?
and I said, because I never had anything I wanted to say until now, and I can tell you, that is how I was, then, now, exactly, and going to school back then, well, you never needed to talk except to say Torricelli, or 7, or predicate nominative, so that's pretty much all I said, and I was so good at that, I mean fantastic, that teachers stopped asking me anything because they figured I knew it, so why not put somebody else on the spot, and today I was thinking, yes, I bet that's exactly why I got fantastic at that, so I wouldn't even have to say that much, and college, well, back then they hadn't invented student-centeredness, so all I had to do was say manifest destiny, or $y^2\sqrt{x^2 - 3} / \sqrt{2}$ or irregular Pindaric ode, and they'd leave me alone there, too, but obviously when I got into this line of work I knew I'd have to say more than that because you can't, for example, go in on day one, fold your arms, and wait for a great course to uplift itself like one of those push-button umbrellas, or stand up at a conference and just say "epideictic," well, you could, but I'm guessing it wouldn't go that well and pretty soon you'd be silent on your own dime, and I didn't come from a family that had enough dimes for that, so I taught myself to talk, the point being, for me at least, what I told my mother 65 years ago is still true: I have to have something I want to say to say anything, and now that I'm thinking about it,

I'm going to SAY those three words when I WANT to say them no matter who misunderstands, and I. A. Richards might say that "rhetoric should be the study of misunderstanding and its remedies," but I'm here to tell you, Ivor, you can study misunderstanding all you want, and I guarantee you won't find the remedy anywhere in rhetoric, not for this one at least, and really, not for any of them, the ones that most matter anyway, because you know what, misunderstanding doesn't start with words, you mean this, I mean that, and "we need to talk," that kind of thing, no, it starts way beforehand, like the one all those years ago, that one started before either one of us even learned how to talk, and I'm thinking if she saw me here now with my pants off she'd misunderstand that, too, and for some reason I'm swearing again, LOUD, into the WABAC machine, at her, and I know it works because now I remember on the street walking home alone that night I heard all this swearing, LOUD, and I swear no one else was there but me . . .

It's just pouring now, I mean really pouring, and you know what, when I'm done with this I'm going to go out for a walk in it, just around here, like Carol always did when it poured and I didn't want to get drenched in the woods, and she'd just walk normal right through it. I'd see her coming back up the street, soaked through after an hour in it, that floppy hat she always wore rain or shine sagging, walking like it was nothing, the way she walked through all the rest of the pouring rain in her life, just head up, OK, this is how this world is, and me, I'm going to keep walking and walking, not going to speed up or slow down because in the end it doesn't make one bit of difference anyway, and you know what, there are probably 10 or 20 other things she did all the time that I never did when she was here, and I'd be thinking why do you do that, care so much about that, whatever, and now, you know what, I do them all, all the time, and, well, what more can I say about that that you can't

9/18: I was just thinking

I was just thinking about entropy, and I can't tell if what I'm thinking comes from Pynchon or physics, but, hey, even for him, what's entropy but two stories bleeding together toward chaos, me and him thermodynamic today, and I have this idea that the brain is a super-anti-entropic machine absorbing all sorts of little things, perceptions, words, everything, and synthesizing them into complex systems, day after day, year after year, lifelong and then, wham, you're dead and the rubber band or magnetism, whatever it is that holds it together stops holding and that stuff blows right back out into the universe a big plume of smoke, or like that poplar I talked about yesterday, a slow leak, but still, sooner or later all that packing, in school, thinking, loving, all of it, unpacked, wham, and it's gone . . .

And I was just thinking, everything I spewed out this year, books, poems, songs, like a 4th of July sparkler, a million blazing flecks of light zinging out, every which way, and I keep thinking, a guy like me, what the hell is going on, and last week I mentioned to somebody how maybe I'm about to die and my insides are trying to get out fast as they can, on the record, so they won't just evaporate into the ether, what a waste, all that work, hey, they're saying, it was hard to get this together, and I want to get said . . .

Then I was just thinking that maybe I did actually die last year except I don't know it yet and neither do you reading along here like, yeah, a live guy wrote this, not some smoke-poof wiping away after all the sparks from that 4th of July sparkler have sparkled out, nothing but a bent over, gray-hair stem that if you touch it turns to ash right there between your fingertips, so maybe everything in me is flashing back through the motherboard into that great hard drive in the sky except for some reason I get to leave behind the heat I accreted in this stupid almost absolute zero of a world, and you say, no way, that's not possible, well let me tell you, I know a thing or two about what's possible and not possible now, and lots of what you have listed under one of those belongs under the other, and that's all I'm going to tell you about that because, well, like I said, one of us would have to go, and since I'm thinking today maybe I already have gone, that just leaves you . . .

9/19: And now, right now, I'm calling this one done

That moon tonight looks a lot like me, not quite altogether, beach ball the day after, half flat on the left side of its head, migraine maybe, air gone missing. I have no idea why we both went from wide-awake, light brimming over everywhere, puffy-cheeked kid with such a smile, to saggy, dimmed down, looking out through vague, smudgy haze that either seeped out or seeped in, about as much light as that nightlight I use now, not because I'm afraid of the dark, because I'm afraid I'll get afraid of it if I don't.

Kind of a relief, really, so intense, too much pressure to keep the air in, pour the light out, teaching-head heavy instead of TV-head light. Hear that hissing? the air still going out of that moon from last night, my head, this book, five days in and it's already half-flat, like I'm stuck in all of Zeno's paradoxes at once, the half-way one, faster and faster to go slower and slower, a book in 20 days, then a book in 10 days, now a book in 5 days, and I'm just saying, I can't write another book in 2.5 days, no way, I have chores to do today that I put off to finish this one, I teach tomorrow all day, so you tell me, where does a book get written there? and even if it did, you know as well as Zeno does that sooner or later I'll be writing like a million books every microsecond and I'll still never get to "done," and the arrow one, zinging along so fast but each instant a standstill, so which is it, zip-zip or zap? time turning into space or vice-versa and that's summer in a nutshell, so stop-action day after day you can't remember anything that came before, so fast it's like it didn't even happen, and the race one, that tortoise slow as those stones sliding over mud in Death Valley when the wind blows and no matter how fast Achilles runs he can't ever catch him with that too-big head start he gave him, so if I'm Achilles, and maybe I am for all I know, I'm thinking, I'm going to make a cup of tea and let that tortoise sweat it out wondering whether I'm gonna catch him at the wire because he's too slow to know that can never happen, no way, and I'm not even running anyway.

And really, you could argue this is not even a book, just another half-book, like the last one, that long line of half-books, my history, and I was just trying to decide whether to put checkered or decorated in front of history but the only way it sounded like a poem was if I used both and you can't because you end up with two half-thoughts that can't ever add up to one thought each racing on a different track toward half-books, and I'm calling this one Paul's paradox and, ditto, a cup of tea, Achilles, let them run as long as they want, because so what if I get another half-book, it's a whole-book world I work in, and maybe that's why I never got anywhere in this poetry racket:

the only box you get is just too damn big for what I have to mail in, and sure, I could unroll a half-book of bubble wrap, and I got a headful of it, believe me, thousands of little pressed-together polyvinyl pierogies, keeping this bit of empty away from that one, and you need them, really do, because if all that empty got together at once in there, there would be trouble, no way to say where this empty ends and that one begins on that long shelf of books, the ones Aristotle named:
"this is this and that is that and don't mix up them up,

OK, because it took me a lot of work to get them apart like that," the superhighway right to www.dottedbubblewrap.dotted.edu, and for some reason I can't seem to write one whole one.

But don't get me wrong, I have no bone to pick with www.dotted, not at all, because if it weren't for www.dotted I'd be, what?
Emily Dickinson shoving stuff in a drawer, where it dies, or I do, and if I'm lucky, I mean like lottery-type lucky, some huge doofus like Higginson (give me a break, Tom, what's with the Wentworth?) swoops in, scoops it up, says: don't look at her, look at me, too big a prick to stick my neck out for her while she was here and would have loved it, maybe even me, and hey, all I'm saying is if she says to me "I love you," I'm outa here, like lickety-split, not even giving her the fake statue act, just, well, you know, she's wackedout as all hell and those poems are like, WTF? but, hey, now she's gone, looky here, slicked up by me, they look like a good whole book.
I'm so-o-o smart. Well, no, Tom, you're not, YOU are NOT!

And I know enough now to know it wasn't always this way; take Parmenides, he hardly wrote even a half-book, and he's on Amazon, OK, I know, someone has to write a long preface and add lots of notes and there's tons of white space so it doesn't just end up being 10 pages and when you pick it up you think "it's just two covers bubblewrapped around empty, I got totally ripped off . . ."

or I could just talk, not bother with all this typed-up hype, like Socrates, say, never wrote down one word, just yakked and yakked with anyone he could track down, and I would love, just love, to be yak-yakking like that with smarties about the soul, say, but the way things work where I work I could sit in my office with the door open now 'til the cows come home, feet on my desk, and not a soul would walk through that door to talk about the soul, all of them crouching over desks behind closed doors writing whole books so they get to stay in the whole book building here with all the other whole book people, the ones I mean who might wave, weak, rushing by my office while I'm waiting, but if all Plato had was Protagoras: wave

Socrates: wave

well, there you have it, nutshell around nothing, so . . .

I'm going to go for a walk. I'm back.
And first thing I noticed was now all that air is out there was room in there for me, I know, because I was there, all of me, on the drive over, not me talking to me, or pretending I'm talking to you when, get real, you know and I know you're not there, no one is, not for a half-book at wwwdot, I mean me just happy being me, and the drive went so slow, maybe not slow as that time in the WABAC machine I smoked some laced weed and it took me a week to drive three miles home and I was almost hoping I'd get pulled over so I could ask the cop am I really only driving .01 miles/hr?

Then I got there, and the sunroofs I walk through right when I start are all just slumped over now, like their air was out, too, a few flecks of yellow still stuck up on the stems, but summer on the run, and that was the last thing I can remember seeing on that walk because it was just me seeing, not me seeing so I could pretend to see you seeing me seeing.

And now, right now,
I'm calling this one done,
and now, right now,
I'm calling lots of things done.
You might be one of them.
All I know is I'm not.
And this is not

because, like I said: Now I'm on this side of that.
And when I say now,

I mean NOW.

Part 3:

In the Dark

Introduction: September 28, 2016

"They make the backs of my arms cold and my feet numb and then my head feel like a planet."

John Kennick

On the morning of September 24, I woke up after a fitful sleep with the first two poems in this series fully composed in my head, waiting there in the dark, thus the title. I have no idea how they got there like that. I just went downstairs and typed them up. The rest of the series came to me just like that, out of the dark, though mostly while I was awake, inviting me to type them up. As I thought about this later, I could see it was the classic "descent into the underworld" that is conventional to epic poems, even its duration, three days, standard for a trip down to the dark. I love "dark" poems, both reading and writing them. I hope you will find something to love here, too.

This morning I wrote a poem so dark I knew I could not allow you to read it.

So I erased every word, starting with the last, the end, where everything always starts, not letter by letter, delete, delete, delete, until nothing is there but white space, no, I feared each delete might leave a shadow deep enough to decipher in the right kind of light until, yes, there is that word again, and that one, and that one, drawn back into the open, so I changed every single one into another, not opposite, or one a parlor game clue might open a track back to, the enigma machine of my head spinning in a code even I could not calculate until one by one by one, each word was another that it could not in its wildest dreams believe it could become, "tomorrow," say, made into "clouds," "fear" into "into," just examples, those, so you will not think that "fear tomorrow," is now "into clouds."

Then I gathered up every copy of every word I had typed, burned them, and it worked.

Except for these traces left on my fingertips that will not wash off no matter how hard I try, and all they can do is wait until tomorrow when I might type a whole different poem that deletes everything of me except these fingertips, now forever mine because they cannot forget what I asked them to do today, for you, so you would not have to read the poem I wrote this morning.

9/24: The Hard Part of Being Alone

I am alone now, I say, to myself mostly, because alone is one word no one else can hear, silent in every sentence that says it.

And the more I say it, to myself, the more it sounds like the only word I no longer need to know.
In the middle of the night, say, while I dream, of her, you, everyone never again here, when I eat, you with me even, my food turning only into me, never you, when I talk, say, the sounds of my words echoing in the places they came from until they make no sense even to me, take up all the space between us, and then when I listen, ear so clear, so near to your lips, only one or two of your words turning, quickly as they can, into mine.

Alone, the word
we are born with,
the language of I am;
the language of "you,"

of "together" of "share," the one we work so hard to learn . . .

and today that foreign tongue of mine, tied in knots, no matter how hard I try to say I am not.

9/25: A Hole, A Hill

Today on my way to work I notice that big boulder built into the bottom of the hill has been pried out and rolled about five feet off to the side.

Behind it is a dark hole receding into the hill, a crowd gathered around it.

Someone says that last night they saw a blinding light, just for a while, then nothing but a winding sheet in a pile.

Someone says they saw something moving around but by the time they got there it was too dark to tell what.

Someone says that while they slept they heard a beautiful music in their dreams and thought they were making it themselves.

Someone says he lost his voice.
Someone says she found hers.

Someone says they smelled roses.
Someone else felt their soft petals.

Someone says they saw the sky opening its eyes, the moon, just glued up there before, dancing in circles with clouds.

Someone saw a shaft of light coming down like a long pipe from a single star. Someone saw a dark ladder heading only up.

Everything, they say, is about to change.

2.

A little girl, three or four, short black hair, peddles her trike down the hill on the other side of the road.

She has fierce, wise eyes and says she is not lost.
She watches us as if she has seen all of this before.

No one seems to notice her so I go that way instead of this, walk back up the hill with her to her grandmother's house.

She will not let me push or pull her little bike, peddles hard the whole way.

I smile, exchange pleasantries,
"It's a nice day, isn't it?"
"You are very strong for such a young girl."

I laugh because she does not, not at anything I say, just fierce eyes, strong legs, determined to do it herself.

She says the crowd around that hole in the hill was there yesterday, is there every day.

She says the same people come out of their houses and look wide-eyed as if they never saw it before.

She says they always say exactly the same things, and by the end of the day the boulder is back in place.

She says she will ride down the little hill tomorrow to see it all again. No matter how often it happens, she says, nothing ever changes.

9/25: This Dark Is Mine

Every night in the woods these trees reach out, caress one another,
leaf to leaf in summer, shadow into shadow twining on the ground all winter, multiplying moonlight, starlight, what care is, not giving, taking, just there, always in the air, a way of prayer.

The light we reach into day after day, not destination, wisdom, I hear them say, simply where we find what we need to survive.
Down below, in that dark, we are rooted, share everything, care for each other, rear our young, prepare for storms, wind, cold; there, the trillion tiny highways from here to everywhere, how we live as one,
out of your sight,

not out of ours.
Look now to what holds you deep down.
There the dark is yours.

At the top of the hill where I always first feel what today I decided to call a holiness in this place, the tall, lean poplar on my right, speaking for all the trees, their collaborative voice, said: Take care now, Paul, this dark is yours.
Show no fear.
It was always there waiting for you, the way from where you are to where you go.

Take heart from us.
We will meet you here every morning, cheer you, the September daylight so bright, so clear, this light we love and use.
But we are specialists of the dark, know all its ways. Remember, so do you, so do you.

9/26: Just Between You and Me

A little vortex of wind in the corner of the stone wall swirls up a few barely-there petals fallen from the fading planter-box impatiens.

They twirl around in circles, wild with desire, chase one another, fast forward:
"Be with me! Be with me!"

Then it all settles, as it always does after a few seconds, separate petals lying stone-still, nowhere near each other, nothing moving, not even me.

9/26: Too Little, Too Late

Just when I walked into the woods today it started to rain, light, a few drops, smatterings. Then it got real dark real fast, the rain coming hard, heavy, big, black sheets of it, like when you walk out waist deep into a settled sea and all of a sudden dark waves are breaking way over your head and you need to decide right then what you're going to do about it.

I took a few more steps, but soon as I heard the first rumble of thunder I turned around. I don't think I'd mind getting struck by lightning, all over in a flash, but when you've been in the woods in storms, trees thrashing around like crazy, wishing they could go anywhere but this, branches crashing down all around you, you can't help but think you might end up under one, for a day, two maybe, until someone came by, all that misery of waiting, thinking, so I turned back, headed home, cars throwing up wakes like motorboats through the water pooled up on the road, wondering how wet the back room would be, all those windows left open.

By the time I got home it had stopped, as it always does, everything you do to avoid it, too little, too late.

9/26: This is not even a half-book yet, but I want so bad to be done with it, because I'm already where I needed to get, and I really think I wrote enough so you can get there, too, if you want to . . .

There is a dark only poems can get to.
I wrote as many of those for you as I had in me, today, this month my whole life, all there for you to find.

Then there's that dark another layer down, the one I was so hoping to find again, willing to write a hundred pages of poems in a month to get to it, and I'm there now, finally, there, a dark like the most perfect late September night of your whole life, 10 PM and you've been out in the yard for two hours already, shirtsleeve warm, a dark your eyes are acclimated to, watching the stars flicker on one by one then tons of them, overwhelming the sky, swathed now in layers of dark, a tiny slice of moon off to the left, just enough to overfill you with the dark that all that light makes visible, and I could try to tell you what it is like, a dark that makes no sound at all, a dark that absorbs and quiets all thinking, a mile-deep pile of soft, black velvet, say, that you just lay back into and you're settling deeper and deeper down in its warm embrace, or a lake no one else knows about, looking-glass still and you're 50 feet deep into it looking up and you can still breathe and see every bit of dark in the whole universe beginning to end.

Then you are happy. Then you are there.
Then you are done with the poems you needed to write to get you there, for today, this month, next year, forever, having used them so beautifully, just what they are good for, portals toward a dark so gentle, so sensuous, you can spend this night, every night, the rest of your life cradled, tenderly, in one another's warm arms.

Today's Coda: Dream a Little Dream With Me

So now I know for sure I'm in the deeper dark, because I had this funny dream with "good" and "bad" and "I" in it, and "good" was in jail because "bad" tricked her and then "bad" tried to trick me so that "good" wouldn't get out of jail, and "I" got so mad "I" tried to kill "bad," but "good" fixed it so she wasn't tricked, she is so smart, and "I" ended up in jail for trying to kill "bad," meaning "I" got to be with "good" and we made love right there like let-me-never-tell-you, and (unquote) I knew, yes, now, finally I am out of danger-dark.

And then I had another dream, just now, where "good" wanted to know why "I" was in jail with her, because she didn't know that "bad" had tried to trick her, didn't even know "bad" existed, and when "I" told "good" "I" was there because "I" tried to kill "bad" she wanted to know who "bad" was and why she tricked her and "I" told her "I" would explain it all to her tomorrow, if she was still in jail with me, which "I" hope she is because when she hears who "bad" is and how "I" tried to kill her, she'll be so happy . . . and we'll make love again like twice-let-me-never-tell-you.

And if we do, and "you" really want to know what making love with "good" like twice-let-me-never-tell-you feels like, just come to my next dream and "I"ll tell "you," because "I" really do want everyone involved in this to know everything, and "you" are involved because (unquote everyone) you had to read this whole book to get here, so you have every right to know who good and bad are and how good it feels for me to be with good again for good.
